SIGNIFICANT FINDING

linked with long-term health outcomes: Study

related with... health outcomes...

The researchers looked at symptom prevalence of depression, anxiety, Covid-19 related distress, and poor sleep quality among people with and without a diagnosis of Covid-19 from 0-16 months. Of the 247,249 people included, 9,979 (4%) were diagnosed with Covid-19 between February 2020 and August 2021. Overall, participants diagnosed with Covid-19 had a higher prevalence of depression and poorer sleep quality compared to individuals who were never diagnosed. "Our research is among the first to explore mental health symptoms after a serious Covid-19 illness in the general population up to 16 months after diagnosis," said study author Unnur Anna Valdimarsdottir, a professor at the University of Iceland. "It suggests that mental health effects are not equal for all Covid-19 patients and that time spent bedridden is a key factor in determining the severity of the impacts on mental health," Valdimarsdottir said.
